

Docket 03-104

Being an FCC licensed broadcast engineer since 1977 and a licensed amateur radio operator, I feel the the commission needs to take an in-depth look at this technology as well as what international entities i.e. Japan have decided about this technology.

I hope the FCC still has sufficient technical expertise to recognize the severe problems associated with this technology and the industry that would be responsible for integrating it. The utility companies have been the worst of all in maintaining their equipment and distribution systems and solving interference issues. The can't take care of what the do now. Do you really think they can implement this technology and not cause disastrous interference to many communication and other electronic systems. Hopefully, the technical realities of the issue will override the all-mighty dollars that the big boys will throw at it to make it happen.
